20 years of Pan-Africanism of Cities and Regions celebrated in Morocco

«For an Africa of all Transitions,
for Cities and Regions as Drivers of Change Strategies»

Press Notice

Under the High Patronage of His Majesty King Mohammed VI, Morocco hosts the Africities Summit for the second time, addressing the theme: «The Transition to Sustainable Cities and Territories: the Role of Territorial Communities of Africa.»

Indeed, it is a decisive role, as more than 60% of the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) adopted by the United Nations fall within the competence of territorial communities, as recognized by decentralization laws. The actual achievement of these objectives depends thus on the strong involvement of elected representatives, local public administrations, and territorial actors (communities, businesses, artists, women, young people, banking institutions, etc.).

The future of Africa and its evolution are increasingly played out at the level of the Continent's cities and territories. Globalization and rapid urbanization are the two powerful trends that mark this evolution. These two trends have a significant impact on the development of African societies. They raise questions about the effectiveness of the current growth and development models pursued in the African context, and even prompt one to consider a paradigm shift in the way people think about the Continent's sustainable development.

In choosing the theme of «the Transition to Sustainable Cities and Territories» for the Africities 2018 Summit, the territorial authorities of Africa have opted for a break proposal that justifies the urgency for a far-reaching change in the growth and development patterns, and a paradigm shift in the Continent's development in order to achieve the structural transformation sought by the African Union Agenda 2063. The Summit will discuss the various dimensions of transition, without disregarding the interactions they maintain among themselves: demographic, ecological, democratic and political, economic and social, geopolitical, as well as culture and communication.

It is further recognized that it is rather in cities and territories that the fight against climate change and poverty would be won or lost. This is why cities and territories of Africa are now key actors in the process of implementing the international agendas adopted by the United Nations in 2015 and 2016, and more particularly the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development (SDG), the Paris Agreement that builds on the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC), the Nationally Determined Contributions (NDCs) for the implementation of the said Agreement, and the New Urban Agenda adopted in Quito, Ecuador. It is for the sake of raising awareness of the new responsibilities incumbent upon them and exploring the ways and means for fully assuming these responsibilities that the leaders of territorial communities of Africa invite all relevant stakeholders to explore with them at the Africities Summit, to be held from 20 to 24 November 2018 in Marrakech, the strategies to be defined and the paths to move along in order to start now the transition towards sustainable cities and territories in Africa.

This eighth edition is therefore a not-to-be-missed event for the territorial communities of Africa, and a significant anniversary date, as it marks the 20 years of existence and organization of the Africities Summits !

On this occasion, the prestigious imperial city of Marrakech will once again be «the beating heart of Africa on the move». Marrakech will be in the full glare of Moroccan, African and international media attention. It will also be the meeting point for local Africa with the business world, thanks to the Africities Exhibition, organized from November 20 to 23, 2018 as part of the Summit. The exhibition will offer the opportunity to put into perspective the expectations and demands for investment and access to basic services in cities and territories of Africa with the supply of products and services offered by companies and other actors. This may lead to the discussion of business contracts, deals, or partnerships.

Open sessions allow the various networks of African local authorities or institutions or organizations wishing to work with African territorial authorities to set forth their proposals and contribute to thought on such issues.

Political sessions that summarize the Summit include political meetings of mayors and territorial authorities; ministers; development partners; as well as a meeting of political dialogue that gathers mayors, ministers, and development partners.

It will also make it possible for the Summit to interact with local populations by opening itself to the general public every day, from 4 to 9 p.m. Worthy of note among the visitors of the Africities Exhibition are ministers, mayors and leaders of local authorities at regional and similar level, presidents and heads of local authorities and central administrations, industrial and economic operators, financial institutions, opinion leaders, cooperation agencies and organizations, NGOs, trade unions, employers' federations and associations, etc.

Creating new synergies, networking territorial Africa, discussing how to boost investment and foster economic growth and employment; such are the goals and ambitions of Africities 2018 Exhibition.

ABOUT AFRICITIES

Since its first edition in 1998, in Abidjan, Africities has defined itself as the pan-African platform for dialogue on decentralization and local governance. As its successive editions progress throughout all regions of the Continent (Windhoek, Namibia in 2000; Yaoundé, Cameroon in 2003; Nairobi, Kenya in 2006; Marrakech, Morocco in 2009; Dakar, Senegal in 2012; Johannesburg, South Africa in 2015), Africities managed to establish itself as an ideal forum for thought, exchange, and evaluation on public decentralization policies, the role and missions of territorial communities in the Continent's development and integration, and cooperation and support programs for decentralization and local communities, led by development partners. Africities also proved to be the right venue for promoting and evaluating inter-African South-South decentralized cooperation. Lastly, Africities provides a unique platform for exchanges between the representatives of the main actors in the life of cities and territories (multi-stakeholder approach) and the representatives of all levels of governance (multi-level approach).

The Africities Summit 2018 will address the fundamental issues raised by Africa's Vision 2063 and take part in the debate of the African Union Commission for its implementation.
